Here she is, the one and only scout soldier with a PPSH-41. A great submachine gun that was produced and widely used during the WW2 by Soviet Army. It is at the time one of the easiest guns to manufacture and it can shoot over 900 bullets in one minute. Because of this, no one could stand before its fire range.

I made the color ratio much darker to create the sense of coldness. the snowflakes are for the same purpose. Her coat looks stiffer now as snow melted into water and soaks the coat. before it can dry the water inside freeze into ice and make the whole coat stiff and rough. Now the expression looks more pathetic. I minimized the reflection on the boots as old boots cannot reflect that much of light. There are more objects on her belts including an extra ammo drum and a TT-33 handgun. I spent a long-time doing research and finding examples of the gun. This is my first time drawing a proper gun and I am satisfied of my outcome. For the first time, and only for now.
